Getting a Good Night's Sleep for the Whole Family - What is a good bedtime routine?

A good bedtime routine prepares your child for sleep and helps them settle down from the excitement of the day. Bedtime routines should involve the same activities from night to night, including weekends, so your child's brain gets the cue that it's time to rest. The bedtime routine also offers parents and children time to bond, which is especially valuable in the school years, when much of your weekdays are spent apart. Try these tips for a better bedtime:

- ❖ Start before they are sleepy: Your child may not be thrilled about ending playtime when they still have energy, but wrangling an overtired kid through bath time and teeth brushing can lead to meltdowns. Start preparing about 45 minutes to an hour before your child's actual bedtime.
- ❖ Skip the screens: Videos and games can be overstimulating for tired brains, and blue light might inhibit melatonin production, which can reduce overall sleep time and quality. Set a wind-down window in which kids don't have to go to bed, but they can't watch TV, use the computer, or access cellphones or tablets.
- ❖ Recap the day: Make room for connection by asking your child about their day or talking about what you plan to do tomorrow. Older kids may also want to process their day by writing in a journal.
- ❖ Let kids have a say: Your middle schooler might prefer quiet time in their room before bed, while your preschooler loves the one-on-one moments spent reading books or singing songs together. Making room for their preferences can help keep bedtime smooth.

Financial Fitness

Learn effective money management, saving, and investment tips to secure financial health. It's time to take control of your financial future. It is more blessed to give than to receive. Receivers always give.

Managing the Master's Money

In my early years of ministry, I frequently would seek out financial tips from a Christian perspective. Today I share a timeless truth from one such expert, the late Larry Burkett. Larry always reminded us that how we handle our finances is the clearest reflection of our spiritual lives. Another friend Roland Hill, in his book Money The Acid Test concurs with the following:

In a world that screams for us to borrow, spend, and accumulate, God's Word calls us to an entirely different standard: faithful stewardship. True financial fitness doesn't begin with a massive bank account; it begins with the heart-deep realization that we own absolutely nothing.

Psalm 24:1 reminds us, "The earth is the Lord's, and everything in it."

When we shift our mindset from being "owners" to being "managers" of God's resources, the suffocating pressure of financial anxiety begins to melt away, replaced by His perfect peace.

To achieve genuine financial freedom, Larry championed the biblical principle of living radically below our means and avoiding the bondage of consumer debt.

Proverbs 22:7 warns us that "the borrower is slave to the lender," a reality too many families experience today.

Financial fitness requires the discipline to create a budget, the resolve to flee from modern financial traps, and a commitment to radical generosity.

Remember, God doesn't bless us to increase our standard of living, but to increase our standard of giving.

By honoring Him first with our tithes, breaking free from the shackles of debt, and planning diligently for the future, we align our wallets with His eternal kingdom. Let us be found faithful with the little, so that He may trust us with much.
