Recognize signs of traumatic stress:

Minimize media exposure

When violent crimes or natural disasters happen, they tend to be all over the news. Whether your child was involved in the event or is just seeing it on the screen, repeat exposure can cause stress. In a survey after the Sept. 11 attacks, more than a third of parents said that their children showed at least one sign of stress after seeing news coverage, and nearly half said that their children were worried about safety. These children were not involved in the events and often lived hundreds of miles away, but television coverage had a profound effect on them.

After any traumatic event, limit your child's media exposure to avoid triggering stress. For older children, you might put parental controls in place and limit their use of social media. This doesn't mean that your child needs to be in the dark about a traumatic event. Instead, you can be your child's source of information. Share pertinent information calmly, then let your child ask questions.

Learning Styles Quiz

Understanding the principles that guide Adventist Christian Education is critical for spiritual growth. Dive deep into these fundamentals in our latest update.

Building Constructive Habits for Study and for Life:

“Cultivate respect for yourself because you are Christ’s purchased possession. Success in the formation of right habits, advancement in that that is noble and just, will give you an influence that all will value. Live for something besides self.”

— Adventist Education - E. G. White

Family Togetherness

Strengthen your family bonds with our guidelines on Family Togetherness. Discover activities, shared goals, and traditions that foster love and unity.

The Importance Of Setting A Sleep Schedule For Your Family:

Your child might not agree when they are fighting bedtime, but children thrive on consistency, sleep included. While looking for sleep cues is a great way to know when infants are ready for their next nap, children need more guidance when they’re older — and kids whose parents set a consistent bedtime get more sleep at night. When making a sleep schedule, be sure to plan it so your children get enough nighttime sleep and still have time to get ready in the morning. With their bedtime set, work back about an hour to start winding down and getting ready.

Financial Fitness

Learn effective money management, saving, and investment tips to secure financial health. It's time to take control of your financial future. It is more blessed to give than to receive. Receivers always give.

Fifteen Dimensions of Growing your church's financials:

6. Diversified Income is critical in today's atmosphere:

Relying solely on one source — such as tithes or offerings — limits the capacity of individuals to grow and fulfill their divine purpose. Both individuals and the church must cultivate multiple streams of income to create stability and expand their influence. Practical examples include developing side businesses that align with biblical principles, hosting paid seminars or workshops that equip the community, and leveraging assets to generate passive income. As Christian author Dave Ramsey reminds us, “The biggest barrier to financial peace is not the lack of income but the failure to diversify income sources and manage them wisely.” Embracing this mindset empowers God’s people to be effective stewards of His resources, ensuring both personal and spiritual growth while advancing the kingdom.
